Born in Montreuil (France), in 1987, King Houndekpinkou is a Franco-Beninese ceramicist who lives in Paris. He works in France, Benin and Japan. In 2012, his discovery of the Roku Koyō (the six ancient pottery kilns of Japan) encouraged him to visit Bizen, Japan, each year to acquire further knowledge and experience besides local potters. There, King was seduced by their spiritual and ceremonial approach to creating ceramic works, which was reminiscent of Benin's animist cult of Voodoo. Following this epiphanic experience, King developed Terres Jumelles, a program that consists in fostering a cross-cultural dialogue between the various pottery sites of Benin and Japan through the local practices of ceramics/pottery in both countries. Today, King has developed a practice that merges tradition, spirituality and visceral creativity while crossing several "borders", whether they are cultural, geographical, generational, disciplinary, technical or historical. Mainly based on the vessel shape and sculptural works, King's practice involves blending materials (e.g.: clays, ashes, powders) from all continents. Though built on strong and proportionate shapes, his works seem disfigured by a surcharge of clay and lively textures that emulate the aesthetics of the Voodoo altars and fetishes of Benin. King is a member of the International Academy of Ceramics and his work is/has been regularly exhibited internationally at art/design fairs, museum exhibitions and biennales in Australia, Benin, Hong-Kong, Japan, Morocco, Senegal, Spain, South Korea and USA.
